

“Thanks, Cheyenne, for your welcome at Superday.”

As I travel the state and meet people who call Wyoming their home, similar themes emerge. From Pinedale to Pine Bluffs, the war against terror, national security and the war in Iraq are on the minds of voters.

Whether in Evanston or Torrington, there is concern about illegal immigration and the porous borders that allow uncontrolled entry into the United States. Without any biases or prejudices, at a time of great risk from terrorist attacks, people want to be certain our borders are secure and not open to the infiltration that could lead to the next serious terrorist attack on our own soil.

From Cheyenne to Sheridan, the uncontrolled federal spending that has led to unacceptable deficit spending and unimaginable federal debt, greatly bothers voters. We are piling up huge debt and will leave a burden on our children and grandchildren that will be crippling. We must rein in spending while always being mindful of the obligations we have to our senior citizens and to our disadvantaged. Promises made to military veterans and seniors over the past decades must never be reneged upon nor broken. Those who came before us and who insured that the liberties we enjoy would be here for us, and for those who come after us, are owed a debt of gratitude we can never adequately repay.

Voters in Wyoming want leadership, not just representation. They want our sole representative in Washington D.C. to be in the tradition of Dick Cheney, one who could influence policy and sit as an equal with the powerful.

As I continue to travel the expanses of Wyoming, I am told over and over by Republican voters that we must retain this seat in Congress. We must hold the seat in the Republican party because that better represents our core beliefs and ideals. Polls continue to indicate that Republican incumbents could face their most serious challenges from Democratic opponents in years.

I have the education, experience, energy and leadership abilities to represent Wyoming and national interests in Congress. I had the honor to serve as commanding officer of a surface ship and a nuclear ballistic missile submarine during my 30 years as a commissioned officer in the US Navy. I spent six years assigned to the Pentagon. I know how things work in Washington and I want to go there and work toward fixing them. Much is right. But much is also wrong and I can tell the difference. I need your vote in the Republican primary on August 22 to begin the process. I can do the job if you will entrust it in me. Thank you. Bill Winney
